THE UNACCOUNTABLE.

There is something in our life upon which the average man has no idea of the full extent of the harm he is doing. The most constant and potent enemy of progress is the man who will not be sensible. We hear of the great value of education and of the need of more schools, but we read of the great number of the young men who have no disposition to be educated, and the great number of the old men who have no thought of being educated. The result is, that the young men are always digging for the mines of ignorance, and the old men are always trying to get the wealth of experience. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it. It is a thing of which we are all aware, and we are all familiar with the results of it.

But there is one thing that is very clear, and that is that the ordinary man is not made for the ordinary life. He is made for a life of action, and he is made for a life of thought. He is made for a life of work, and he is made for a life of play. He is made for a life of art, and he is made for a life of science. He is made for a life of beauty, and he is made for a life of wisdom. He is made for a life of goodness, and he is made for a life of truth.
