ABOUT PLAYS AND PLAY FOLKS

"Some day," said Gilbert and Sullivan, "we shall have to write a play that will last for three weeks."

The plan was to take a famous play and make it last for three weeks by a very simple device. They took "The Frozen Deep," and after the first act, when the story was winding up to a climax, the stagehands would come running down from the dressing-room, and shout, "I say, gentlemen, I say, we must have a blizzard, I say, gentlemen." Then all the scenery would be set to snow, and the audience would find themselves with their arms frozen to the seat, and every other part of their body frozen to the stage. And the play would last for three weeks.
