AT THE THEATERS.

"Beloved," by H. B. Farnum; presented by the Farnum Stock Company at Boston's West End Theatre.

The play is a little better than the average, but the acting and the play cannot be compared with the best work of the season. The scenery is well done, and the acting is creditable in some parts, but the whole is not up to the standard of the best work of the season. The play is a little better than the average, but the acting and the play cannot be compared with the best work of the season. The scenery is well done, and the acting is creditable in some parts, but the whole is not up to the standard of the best work of the season.

The story, at the present day, is not to be considered as a model of the best work of the season. The characters are well drawn, and the acting is creditable in some parts, but the whole is not up to the standard of the best work of the season. The story, at the present day, is not to be considered as a model of the best work of the season. The characters are well drawn, and the acting is creditable in some parts, but the whole is not up to the standard of the best work of the season.

The play, at the present day, is not to be considered as a model of the best work of the season. The characters are well drawn, and the acting is creditable in some parts, but the whole is not up to the standard of the best work of the season. The play, at the present day, is not to be considered as a model of the best work of the season. The characters are well drawn, and the acting is creditable in some parts, but the whole is not up to the standard of the best work of the season.

The play, at the present day, is not to be considered as a model of the best work of the season. The characters are well drawn, and the acting is creditable in some parts, but the whole is not up to the standard of the best work of the season. The play, at the present day, is not to be considered as a model of the best work of the season. The characters are well drawn, and the acting is creditable in some parts, but the whole is not up to the standard of the best work of the season.